How the digital TV switchover may affect you.

What is the digital TV switchover?

TV in the UK is going digital, and the existing analogue signal is being switched off TV region by TV region between now and 2012.

Digital UK is the independent not-for-profit company responsible for leading the digital TV switchover.

to find out when your region switches to digital and what services you will be able to receive after switchover.

What does switchover mean for me?

Any TV not converted to digital will not work after switchover. If you are travelling around the UK, the availability of digital TV is likely to vary from location to location.

You can receive a digital TV signal in a number of ways:

1. An aerial
2. A satellite
3. A laptop or PC

1. Through an aerial

Individual aerials

You may need to upgrade your aerial to get a good picture wherever you travel. We recommend that you use a good quality directional aerial and have it safely mounted as high as possible. Whilst an external aerial is likely to be better, you could consider a set-top aerial. For more information on set-top aerials see Ricability's website at www.ricability-digitaltv.org.uk

• Communal aerial systems

Some caravan sites enable TV signals to be piped directly to vehicles through a communal aerial system. The site manager will be able to tell you whether the system is able to receive a digital TV signal. They will also need to check whether the system will need attention to pick up the digital TV signals during and after the switchover.

You can choose to upgrade your television with either:

- A digital box that can be connected to your existing television. Remember that if you choose this option the digital box will also need a power supply.
- A digital TV (IDTV) with a digital box built-in. These only need one power supply and some even come with integrated DVD players.

2. Through a satellite

To receive digital TV through a satellite, you will need to have a satellite dish and digital box. These can be purchased from a specialist caravanning supplier or directly from satellite providers. There are various subscription and non-subscription services available. Contact Sky, Freesat from Sky, freesat, or your satellite service provider for more information.

3. Through a laptop or PC

You can also receive digital television through your laptop or PC, by connecting a digital TV receiver.

These are small devices that plug into the USB hub, and have an antenna or aerial lead. These can be purchased from most computer suppliers.
